Module Description

This course lays the foundation for studying medical and biological sciences. It details human body organ description and their Latin nomenclature (anatomy), and then describes the main cellular and tissue components of each organ (histology). In parallel, a brief description of the physiological role of these tissues will be addressed as well. In many instances, the anatomy and histology will be jointly studied in one lecture-session to allow an integrated and comprehensive knowledge.